1. WAHYU : “Good morning, everyone. Today we’re going to discuss fuel prices in Indonesia.

Recently, prices for unsubsidized fuels like Pertamina Turbo have gone up. However, Pertalite and Pertamina remain stable for now.

Nevertheless, many people are worried that prices will rise. Let’s go straight to our reporter, Rafly. Rafly?”

2. RAFLY : Thank you, Wahyu. Currently, some fuel prices have gone up. Pertamina Turbo is now around 19,900 rupiah per liter. Meanwhile, Pertalite is still around 10,000 rupiah, and Pertamina is around 12,300 rupiah. This situation has people worried about the future. Back to you, Wahyu.

3. WAHYU : Thank you, Rafly. Now let’s hear directly from the community. Rafly, please interview the residents.

4. RAFLY: Hello, sir, I have a question. Are you concerned about the rise in fuel prices?

5. HILMAN : Yes, I’m worried. If fuel prices go up, transportation and food prices will go up too.

6. RAFLY : What do you hope from the government?

7. HILMAN: I hope the government can keep Pertalite stable. Because many people depend on it.

8. RAFLY : Thank you for your opinion, sir. Now, let's hear from another citizen to see a different perspective.

Transition to Fadlan

9. RAFLY : Hello, I'm here with another citizen. What do you think about this situation?

10. FADLAN : I think it's still safe for now. But I'm worried because some fuel prices have already gone up.

11. RAFLY : Do you think Peralite and Pertamina will also increase

12. FADLAN: Yes, I think it is possible.

Because we can already see that other fuel, like Pertamina Turbo, has increased. This makes people worried that other fuel like Pertamina and Peralite might follow.

If that happens, it will affect many people, especially those who use fuel every day. So, I really hope the prices can stay stable.

13. RAFLY : Alright, thank you for your opinion. Back to you, Wahyu.

TRANSITION

14. WAHYU : Thank you, Rafly. Now we ask an expert, Satria. Why are fuel prices increasing?

15. SATRIA: Fuel prices increase because of global oil prices. When global oil prices go up, Indonesia is also affected because we still depend on imported oil. In addition, the exchange rate of the rupiah against the US dollar also plays an important role. If the rupiah becomes weaker, the cost of importing fuel becomes more expensive.

That is why fuel prices can increase. Even though subsidized fuel like Pertalite is still stable for now, there is still a possibility of price adjustment in the future. So, the concern from the public is very understandable.

16. WAHYU : Thank you everyone. Fuel prices are still stable for now, but people remain worried. We hope the government can keep prices stable. I'm Wahyu, thank you for watching.
